Where Solutions Take Shape

Today's office workers spend an average of 37% of their time every week sitting in meetings. That's why designing meeting rooms that fulfill employees' needs, both practically and creatively, is a critical step in a successful company strategy.

meeting spaces

The objective of a collaborative workspace is to bring team members together in pursuit of a common goal. Even if individuals play different roles, the workspace they share should accommodate their contributions.

collaboration

Open floor plans continue to resonate with a wide range of businesses as it offers an increase of collaboration amongst employees. Indoff Partners have access to a wide range of solutions that'll make your office feel bigger and operate smoother than ever before.

open plan

The private office, traditionally a corporate standard in workplace planning, has evolved into a nimble space, supporting technology-rich, collaboration-focused work. Today's private offices not only address individual needs, but also focus on group work.

A cafe in the workplace can be a dynamic space that connects people with colleagues, their work, and their organization. It transforms traditional spaces into destinations for connection, focus and innovation.

Give your guests a favorable first impression when you equip your reception area with professional, sleek furniture that not only gives a good first impression but that also provides a comfortable place to sit and wait while preparing for a meeting.

Storage should do more than hold files. It should augment your work process: provide easy access to materials, maximize real estate, act as a forum for collaboration, and contribute to a unified workplace aesthetic.

We all need some space from time to time to focus on the task at hand. Lounge surrounds, mobile screens, quiet pods, and noise cancellation solutions can increase productivity while also reducing stress. These solutions increase employee productivity as well as produce higher quality results.

Today, half of U.S. employees are working from home and are quickly discovering that their couches and kitchen tables are not alternatives to proper office furniture. We can help create a standards program that will provide comfort while increasing productivity within your employee's home environment for years to come.

Outdoor furniture provides your employees with a safe space to gather for lunch and meetings as well as provide a much-needed break from their indoor environment. Stylish yet durable furniture is important for the outdoors as it's not only exposed to the public but to mother nature as well.
